A LIFE'S WORK

Fasor took its current form in the mid-1990s. In 1981, when we started, it was just the middle room and a small terrace covered with grapevines. Today, we welcome guests with 3 rooms and two terraces.

The satisfied sighs, cheerful laughter, and love for traditional food over the past 45 years could fill a thousand similar rooms.

I am proud of everything that Fasor means today to our guests, to the people of Szeged, to guests from far away, to our family, and to my colleagues. The honest, good will and expertise of many friends has helped us over the nearly five decades. The beginning was supported by my sister Zsuzsi's accounting advice, and our growth pushed forward by a huge creative ambition and a pinch of luck. In 1981, we acquired the place through an auction, and thus we began the Fasor adventure, which, with my partner Icu, soon became our life, our work, and our love. Sadly, she is can no longer be with us, but our children carry on the spirit. Our wonderful chefs – among them my sister Zsuzsi's granddaughter – carry on the flavors which have not changed in decades. A heartwarming memory is that Icu's parents and my mother, even in their retirement in the 1980s, worked in the restaurant daily. My mother-in-law cooked in the kitchen, my father-in-law oversaw things with the great care of a good host, while my mother produced freshly washed and ironed tablecloths. I remember them too with a grateful heart.

Maybe a restaurant can only be authentic if its founder knows, worked on, and shaped every part of it, then, by passing it into good hands, tries to guide, help, and protect its development.

Fasor could not be what it is today without the selfless work of my children and colleagues. We are a family restaurant, and in fact, the entire team is one big family. With the same goals, intentions, and determination. The majority of our staff has been strengthening the restaurant for decades. It's my pride that they embody the best of their profession and represent my founding intentions day by day.

I remember when, after hard work, exhausted workers came to us to regain their energy, sometimes even from far away. No one has left Fasor hungry, and perhaps not even without having enjoyed their meal. My service is based on hard labour, on dishes that require manual effort and expertise, built on traditional, hearty, diverse, and homestyle Hungarian meals. That's why we often hear: "...yes, my grandma made it like this," or "how much my dear father loved this," or "back in my childhood, uncle Józsi," or "our teacher when cooking outdoors..."

It makes me happy when an old acquaintance drops in, or a family or group of friends gathers. We've been visited by recognized athletes, actors, comedians, and it's also not rare that someone returns to us while visiting home from abroad – recently even a Nobel Prize-winning scientist – wanting to relive the wonderful flavors, memories, and experiences from 10-20 years ago. Taste buds turn on the movies of old times, and familiar flavors evoke romantic evenings, true friends, and unforgettable times spent together, taking us back to a more beautiful, different, or youthful world, and this magical journey doesn't end until the final act: the incomparable Semiramis coffee. At this point, at ease, satisfied, and with a smile on their faces from the experience, guests reflect: there are things that remain the same in this fast-changing world.

We can't be perfect, but we strive to give our best. The rare occasion when we make a mistake is a wonderful chance to correct and deliver what we prepare for each day.

We work so that the dishes we offer, our friendly service, and welcoming atmosphere can become an experience worth remembering, or reliving. Today, my children tend to the restaurant. The hard part of the work is now done by them and their colleagues. The joy, however, is mine:

"Watching over the cheerful groups, the smiling faces, the young couples perhaps sharing their first dinner together, and to see how the love we cook into our food, the service adorned by the humility of hospitality, or a lovely dessert touches the soul."

From our legendary stewed tripe, we've served so much of over the decades, we could set a record, but the best part is when I see a guest wipe up the last drop of sauce with the crust of the bread, just as eagerly as when the plate arrived. With me, it's the same case. My enthusiasm and fascination towards this kind of hospitality does not fade.

I'm no longer young, but I'm determined and looking forward to be here for our 50th anniversary. It will be a huge event. I hope we'll meet again there!
